

Key Knowledge

Milk, yoghurt, cheese, butter, ice cream, chocolate and custard all contain milk. Milk is produced by dairy farmers.

Bananas, oranges, pineapples, peaches and mangoes are not grown on farms in Britain. We buy these fruits from other countries that are hotter. This is called trade.

We grow sugar beet plants in the UK. However, most of the world's sugar is produced in tropical climates. Too much sugar is not good for you.

You can buy fresh fruit and vegetables from the greengrocers.

Some people buy free range items. This means that the animals where the food comes from have been kept in their natural conditions and have lots of space to move.
